

Katerina Paraskevas, MD, MPH

Dr. Paraskevas is committed to culturally sensitive, patient-centered care. She has served in both clinical and public health roles in New York, including with the Departments of Health and Justice, and is recognized for her expertise in cross-cultural communication. She brings experience in medical education, public health, service, and leadership, having served as an adjunct professor at the CUNY Graduate Center and as a fellow, then executive health and environmental advisor to the City of New York. As the first delegate of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Conference on Occupational and Environmental Medicine (MARCOEM) to the MSSNY House of Delegates, Dr. Paraskevas continues to focus on strengthening communication, trust, and access in healthcare. She also chairs the Mentorship Committee for the Women Physicians Section.

More succinct version:

Dr. Paraskevas is committed to culturally sensitive, patient-centered care. She has served in clinical and public health roles with the NYC Department of Health and the Department of Justice and has taught at the CUNY Graduate Center. She currently chairs the Mentorship Committee of the Women Physicians Section and is the first delegate of MARCOEM to the MSSNY House of Delegates. Her work focuses on strengthening communication, trust, and access in healthcare.