

LeeAnna Muzquiz, MD is a graduate of Montana State University where she earned a BS in Microbiology with a minor in Native American Studies. She graduated from the University of Washington School of Medicine (UWSOM) in 2000 and completed her Family Medicine training at Swedish Family Medicine Residency, Cherry Hill Campus in 2003. She is an enrolled member of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes (CSKT) and since finishing residency has worked for the CSKT in the Tribal Health Department where she served as Medical Director for 10 years as well as practicing full-time. She is also a clinical associate professor in the Department of Family Medicine at UW School of Medicine. In July 2018 she reduced her clinical work as she assumed a new role as the Associate Dean for Admissions at UWSOM. Recently, she was selected to be the Vice Dean for Rural and Regional Affairs for the UW School of Medicine and will transition to this fully in April 2026. Her interests in medicine include women's health and chronic disease management, particularly diabetes, as well as teaching and mentoring. She is passionate about improving the ecosystem of medicine through mentoring, advocacy, and influencing health policy and enjoys spending time with her family and enjoying beautiful Flathead Lake in Montana, where she makes her home.
